

State Parks
Leonard Harrison State Park, on the east side of Pine Creek Gorge, encompasses 585 acres and offers modern facilities, a visitor center, and the most famous scenic views of the 800-foot deep canyon. Leonard Harrison of Wellsboro donated the park's original 121 acres to the Commonwealth.

On the west side of Pine Creek Gorge, 366-acre Leonard Harrison State Park holds the name of the Civilian Conservation Corps' first superintendent, Leonard Harrison. A lumberman who ran a logging camp in the area during the 1870s, Leonard Harrison of Wellsboro donated the land to the state in 1903.

The 218-acre Little Pine State Park is surrounded by a beautiful mountain section of Tidiagohton State Forest in the Appalachian Mountain Region. Upper Pine Bottom State Park, a small day use area along PA 44 west of Waterville, is maintained by Little Pine State Park.

Pine Creek Valley History

Long before the first railroad tracks were laid through this valley, people traveled the rugged shorelines and swift waters of Pine Creek for hundreds of years via footpath and canoe. The Seneca Indians used the Pine Creek Path as a connection between the Great Shamokin Path (along the Susquehanna River) and the Iroquois settlements along the Genesee River in New York. Several seasonal hunting camps were established by the Senecas, one of which was located at the first fork of Pine Creek where Waterville is now located. In 1780, John English, a Scotch-Irish Revolutionary War veteran who had crossed the Delaware with George Washington, received this land as reward for his outstanding military service. He built a cabin on "English Island," the largest of the three islands in Pine Creek below its confluence with Little Pine Creek. The native peoples respected his ability to prosper in the wilderness, and lived in harmony with him. His descendants founded English Center, where one of the world's largest leather tanning operations would be built.

In the following years, hopeful settlers followed John English up Pine Creek, but only a few were hardy enough to scrape out an existence. By the 1820s, word of the vast stands of virgin timber in the Pine Creek Valley had spread. By 1832, 145 sawmills had been in operation in the Pine Creek watershed, but many were destroyed by the flood of 1832. By 1920, hardly a marketable tree was left standing. The majestic pines had become ship masts, the bark of massive hemlocks fed the leather tanning industry, and the hardwoods helped fuel the Industrial Revolution, thereby expanding the American frontier.

In 1883, the Jersey Shore, Pine Creek & Buffalo Railroad was established to carry lumber from the sawmills in Tidiagohton, Cammal and Slate Run. The railroad also transported coal north to New York State, and by 1896 was carrying seven million tons of freight and ran three passenger trains on daily runs between Wellsboro Junction and Williamsport. The railroad changed hands a few times, becoming the Fallbrook Railroad, a branch of the New York Central Railroad, and the Penn Central before it was taken over by Conrail. The last freight train passed through the gorge on October 7, 1988, ending more than a century of service.

The conversion of the railway to a public recreation trail has occurred in stages. The first segment, a 20-mile section from Ansonia south to Rattlesnake Rock, opened August 27, 1996. The second segment, which continues south from Rattlesnake Rock to Waterville, opened in June of 2001. The trail has been completed from Waterville south to Jersey Shore, and the segment from Ansonia north to Wellsboro Junction was completed in the spring of 2007.
